

all of the real estate developments with which Paul Galter, Marv Copple and I were involved were received as profits from the lot sales". And then he says, "I was paid a total, an additional total of $32,500". That statement is contrary to his statement in the deposition and not only in my opinion is it contrary to his statement in the deposition but it once again misrepresents and the second misrepresentation is the misrepresentation that he tries to put off on the public and you and I as to what questions were asked in that deposition. The defenders of the Attorney General have said, ah, but technically if you look closely at all the words, he didn't tell any lies, he may have admitted something but he didn't tell any lies. He was quibbling maybe. But I think that the best answer to that is to look to see what the Attorney General himself said about his disclosure of February 6th in his original response to the Domina report. This is what he said under questioning from committee counsel at the hearings that we held a couple of weeks ago. With regard to that $32,500 he said, "I wish I would have told him about the extra $32,500. I didn't. I played the part of the lawyer and answered his questions. And finally further on in that same deposition or in that same hearing he said, "I didn't lie to them. I answered their questions. You are saying to me, why didn't you volunteer more than the answer to the question? And I have told you I am sorry. I wish I would have and I should have, I admit that". The last point I want to take in my fair five minutes, some have said that the behavior of the Attorney
